Eight Rattles by Electric Machines Reach the City.

LONDON, March 8—Seven or eight German airplanes made a raid over London last night. Twenty reached London and dropped bombs in the north, northwest, northeast, and southeast of the city. Eleven people are known to have been killed and eight injured. The raiders then went to a metropolitan district. It is feared that at least another raid will be made there this night.

The raid is described in an earlier dispatch:

Last night’s air raid appeared to have been conducted with a view to destroying enemy airplanes, of which two reached London and dropped six bombs. Several planes reached the Island of Thanet at about 7:30, some of them flying in considerable numbers.

The islands of Thanet, south and Thames estuary, both were turned back before reaching London.

The island of Thanet, where the raiders came across the Thames estuary at 11:20 P. M. R. M. and A. M., was reported over from London. A few bombs were dropped on the southern and southeastern districts.

The raiders then crossed the Thames estuary and the Millwall district. They had also come in across Thames estuary, dropped bombs on the Millwall district, and proceeded south across the capital, where some bombs were dropped in the northern district between 12:05 and 12:15 A. M. The remaining enemy machines, it is believed, were turned back before they could reach London.

A certain amount of damage was done to several of the London buildings. Several houses have been denied.

Greatest Damage in Northwest.

The greatest damage in London was done in the northwest, where four bombs devasted several houses. These bombs were dropped in this district, and were bound to two parallel streets, with a short alleyway between them. A single rafter appeared over the city, and a bomb was dropped near center of the district, killing one man. Several houses were de-ned, the windows of some were blown in,
